Which three statements about Cisco IOS RRI are correct? (Choose three.)

- A. Routes are created from ACL entries when they are applied to a static crypto map.
- B. RRI must be configured with DMVPN.
- C. VRF-based routes are supported.
- D. RRI is not supported with ipsec-profiles.
- E. Routes are created from source proxy IDs by the receiver with dynamic crypto maps.

Answer: A,C,E

Explanation:

Each route is created on the basis of the remote proxy network and mask, with the next hop to this network being the remote tunnel endpoint. By using the remote Virtual Private Network (VPN) router as the next hop, the traffic is forced through the crypto process to be encrypted. Each route is created on the basis of the remote proxy network and mask, with the next hop to this network being the remote tunnel endpoint. By using the remote Virtual Private Network (VPN) router as the next hop, the traffic is forced through the crypto process to be encrypted. After the static route is created on the VPN router, this information is propagated to upstream devices, allowing them to determine the appropriate VPN router to which to send returning traffic in order to maintain IPsec state flows. Being able to determine the appropriate VPN router is particularly useful if multiple VPN routers are used at a site to provide load balancing or failover or if the remote VPN devices are not accessible via a default route. Routes are created in either the global routing table or the appropriate virtual route forwarding (VRF) table.
