A. The local distance it sets may conflict with the EIGRP administrative distance.
B. The internal distance it sets is preferred over the external distance.
C. The internal distance it sets may conflict with the EIGRP administrative distance.
D. The local distance it sets may conflict with the RIP administrative distance.
E. Implementing the command is a Cisco best practice.
F. The external distance it sets is preferred over the internal distance.
Answer: B,D Explanation:
To allow the use of external, internal, and local administrative distances that could be a better route than other external, internal, or local routes to a node, use the distance bgp command in address family or router configuration mode. To return to the default values, use the no form of this command.
distance bgp external-distance internal-distance local-distance
no distance bgp external-distance Administrative distance for BGP external routes. External routes are routes for which the best path is learned from a neighbor external to the autonomous system. Accept table values are from 1 to 255. The default is 20. Routes with a distance of 255 are not installed in the routing table.

internal-distance Administrative distance for BGP internal routes. Internal routes are those routes that are learned from another BGP entity within the same autonomous system. Accept table values are from 1 to 255. The default is 200. Routes with a distance of 255 are not installed in the routing table.
local-distance
Administrative distance for BGP local routes. Local routes are those networks listed with a network router configuration command, often as back doors, for that router or for networks that are being redistributed from another process. Accept table values are from 1 to 255. The default is 200.
Routes with a distance of 255 are not installed in the routing table.
Defaults
external-distance: 20 internal-distance: 200 local-distance: 200
In this case, the internal distance is 60 and the external is 90, and the local distance is 120 (same as RIP).
