NEW QUESTION: 2

You have configured an application that batches up data on the servers before submitting it for intake. Your front-end or application server failed and now you have lost log data. How can you prevent this from occurring in the future?

Choose the correct answer:

- A. Submit system and application logs to Amazon EMR and access the data for processing within seconds
- B. Submit system and application logs to Amazon Kinesis Streams and access the stream for processing within seconds
- C. Trigger Lambda to invoke a process where a log file has been uploaded to Amazon S3 or modified
- D. Input historical log information using Amazon Machine Learning and use Redshift to analyze and store the logs

Answer: B

Explanation:

With Amazon Kinesis Streams, you can have producers push data directly into an Amazon Kinesis stream. For example, you can submit system and application logs to Amazon Kinesis Streams and access the stream for processing within seconds. This prevents the log data from being lost if the front-end or application server fails, and reduces local log storage on the source.

Amazon Kinesis Streams provides accelerated data intake because you are not batching up the data on the servers before you submit it for intake.
