NEW QUESTION: 4

Your customer has a main office that houses 450 employees and a call center that houses 120 employees. The main office and the call center are connected by a 100-megabits per second (Mbps) wide area network (WAN) link. The call center uses a Private Branch Exchange (PBX) that has 150 incoming lines.

Your customer plans to deploy a Lync infrastructure for all employees.

You collect network information and start building a Lync usage model.

You need to identify the deliverables that must be achieved after the Lync usage modeling phase is completed.

Which two deliverables should you achieve? (Each correct answer presents part of the solution. Choose two.)

- A. RTC traffic estimation over the WAN link
- B. calculation of server-to-server generated Lync traffic
- C. calls simulation over the WAN link
- D. calculation of user-generated Lync traffic
- E. Quality of Service (QoS) configuration

Answer: A,D

Explanation:

Modeling traffic is effectively a process of calculating or extrapolating expected data usage of an application based on understanding the data requirements of the application. Usage scenarios can be defined and data calculation can be performed based on the respective scenarios. However, modeling RTC traffic is only as useful as the information provided. There are certainly some published generic guidelines about utilization levels and user profiles, but they are not a replacement for obtaining accurate information on actual PSTN usage, peer calling, and conferencing usage.
