NEW QUESTION: 1

The administrator configured a Cisco ASA 5505 as a Cisco Easy VPN hardware client and also defined a list of Cisco Easy VPN backup servers in the Cisco ASA 5505. After an outage of the primary VPN server, you notice that your Cisco Easy VPN hardware client has now reconnected via a backup server that was not defined within the original Cisco Easy VPN backup servers list. Where did your Cisco Easy VPN hardware client get this backup server?

- A. The backup servers that you listed were no longer available, so the Cisco Easy VPN hardware client queried the load balance server for a "new" backup server address.
- B. The backup servers that you listed were no longer available, so a Group Policy that was configured on the primary VPN server pushed "new" backup server addresses to your client.
- C. The backup servers that you listed were no longer available, so the Cisco Easy VPN hardware client queried and received from a predefined LDAP server a "new" backup server address.
- D. The backup servers that you listed were no longer available, so the Cisco Easy VPN hardware client queried the primary VPN server via RADIUS protocol for a "new" backup server address.

Usage Guidelines

To remove the backup-servers attribute from the running configuration, use the no form of this command without arguments. This enables inheritance of a value for backup-servers from another group policy. IPsec backup servers let a VPN client connect to the central site when the primary ASA is unavailable. When you configure backup servers, the ASA pushes the server list to the client as the IPSec tunnel is established.

Configure backup servers either on the client or on the primary ASA. If you configure backup servers on the ASA, it pushes the backup server policy to the clients in the group, replacing the backup server list on the client if one is configured.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Explanation:

Choice "C" is correct. A review provides limited assurance that there are no material modifications that should be made to the financial statements in order for them to be in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles, whereas a compilation provides no assurance.

Choice "A" is incorrect. A review does not test for completeness, nor does a compilation test for reasonableness. A review provides limited assurance about the financial statements based on inquiry and analytical review procedures, while a compilation provides no assurance and includes no testing for reasonableness.

Choice "B" is incorrect. A review provides limited assurance that there are no material modifications that should be made to the financial statements in order for them to be in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles, and it is based on inquiry and analytical review procedures. Positive assurance (such as an audit opinion) is only provided when more extensive procedures have been performed.

Choice "D" is incorrect. A review provides limited assurance that there are no material modifications that should be made to the financial statements in order for them to be in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles, and it is based on inquiry and analytical review procedures. Positive or reasonable assurance (such as an audit opinion) is only provided when more extensive procedures have been performed. A compilation provides no assurance at all.
