- B. It feeds the communication process and risk management process and should be considered when training end-users.
- C. It is only a concern of a client.
- D. It is handled by third parties.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Note:

*Organizational Change Management

This process starts at the strategic level and then identifies challenges of the implementations in order to design the systems that allow lowering the risk. Identifying the change requirements from the beginning of the project would help organization to manage it effectively.

*The Manage focus area is organized into 13 processes including the Organizational Change Management process:
The objective of the Organizational Change Management process is to be aware of the Client's Organizational Change Management Strategy and to effectively create a Change and Communication Plan that addresses this strategy. The goal is to create the change momentum needed to increase buy-in and reduce resistance - thus reducing productivity losses.
