NEW QUESTION: 1

An administrator has an application that requires high CPU throughput.

Which action would ensure that the application gets the required throughput?

- A. Disable Fully Automated DRS.
- B. Adjust the virtual machine latency sensitivity.
- C. Enable Fault Tolerance on the virtual machine.
- D. Set a CPU limit on the virtual machine.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation

You can adjust the latency sensitivity of a virtual machine to optimize the scheduling delay for latency sensitive applications.

ESXi is optimized to deliver high throughput. You can optimize your virtual machine to meet the low latency requirement of latency sensitive applications. Examples of latency sensitive applications are VOIP or media player applications, or applications that require frequent access to the mouse or keyboard devices.

NEW QUESTION: 4

Courtney is the project manager for her organization. She is working with the project team to complete the qualitative risk analysis for her project. During the analysis Courtney encourages the project team to begin the grouping of identified risks by common causes. What is the primary advantage to group risks by common causes during qualitative risk analysis?

- A. It helps the project team realize the areas of the project most laden with risks.
- B. It assist in developing effective risk responses.
- C. It can lead to the creation of risk categories unique to each project.
- D. It saves time by collecting the related resources, such as project team members, to analyze the risk events.

Answer: B

Explanation:

By grouping the risks by categories the project team can develop effective risk responses. Related risk events often have common causal factors that can be addressed with a single risk response.
