NEW QUESTION: 3

Which of the following statements are true regarding table locks?

- A. They are not released when the connection is closed
- B. They can only be released by the client holding them.
- C. They are implicitly released when the connection is closed.
- D. They can be released by other connections than the client holding them.

Answer: B,C

Explanation:

28.2. Explicit Table Locking Explicit locks held by a client also are released if the client issues another LOCK TABLES statement. Locks cannot be maintained across connections; if a client has any unreleased locks when its connection to the server terminates, the server implicitly releases its locks. An administrator with the SUPER privilege can terminate a client connection with the KILL statement, which causes release of locks held by the client. Only the client that holds a lock acquired with LOCK TABLES can release the lock. Another client cannot release it. In other words, if you acquire a lock, it's yours until you give it up. Another client cannot force you to release it.
