NEW QUESTION: 1

A corporate network includes a single Active Directory Domain Services (AD DS) domain.

The domain contains 10 domain controllers.

The domain controllers run Windows Server 2008 R2 and are configured as DNS servers.

You plan to create an Active Directory-integrated zone.

You need to ensure that the new zone is replicated to only four of the domain controllers.

What should you do first?

A. Use the ntdsutil tool to add a naming context.

B. Use the dnscmd tool with the /zoneadd parameter.

C. Create a new delegation in the ForestDnsZones application directory partition.

D. Use the ntdsutil tool to modify the DS behavior for the domain.

Answer: A

Explanation:

To control which servers get a copy of the zone we have to store the zone in an application directory partition. That application directory partition must be created before we create the zone, otherwise it won't work. So that's what we have to do first. Directory partitions are also called naming contexts and we can create one using ntdsutil. Here I tried to create a zone with dnscmd /zoneadd. It failed because the directory partition I wanted to use did not exist yet. To fix that I used ntdsutil to create the directory partition dc=venomous,dc=contoso,dc=com. Note that after creating it a new naming context had been added. Then, after a minute or two, I tried to create the new zone again, and this time it worked.

Store Data in an AD DS Application Partition

You can store Domain Name System (DNS) zones in the domain or application directory partitions of Active Directory Domain Services (AD DS). An application directory partition is a data structure in AD DS that distinguishes data for different replication purposes. When you store a DNS zone in an application directory partition, you can control the zone replication scope by controlling the replication scope of the application directory partition.
