NEW QUESTION: 1

Refer to the exhibit.

How should you redesign this network running BGP to improve availability of the routers 1A and 1B at the core site?

- A. Create a multichassis system with the two routers
- B. Enable graceful restart
- C. Deploy BGP PIC
- D. Use link bundles over multiple slots

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION: 2

The exhibit shows a network diagram for a company's core site. The network consists of two core routers, 1A and 1B, connected to each other and to two edge routers, 2A and 2B. The core routers are running BGP and are connected to the edge routers. The edge routers are connected to the Internet. The network is currently running BGP with a single link between the core routers. The network administrator wants to improve the availability of the core routers. The administrator is considering the following options:

- A. Create a multichassis system with the two routers. This option involves configuring the two core routers as a single logical system. This would allow the routers to share resources and provide a single point of failure. This option is not recommended because it would require a significant amount of configuration and would not provide the desired level of availability.
- B. OpenCV enable graceful restart. This option involves enabling graceful restart on the core routers. This would allow the routers to restart without disrupting traffic. This option is not recommended because it would require a significant amount of configuration and would not provide the desired level of availability.
